Brexit Holds the Key to Election

By: Richard Colwell

The summer is over and the Dail returns this week, with the three questions of Brexit, Budget and Elections on everyone's mind. So, can the government in its current form a) outlast any Brexit negotiation period and b) get a budget signed off, with the pressure of a possible election on the cards?

Polling of first preference vote by party gives us some indication of just how closely this imminent election will be fought. In today's poll both larger parties are in spitting distance of each other. Fine Gael just about take the lead securing 29% of the first preference vote – but this is still some way down on the highs of 33% seen at the start of the year.

In contrast Fianna Fail end up just behind on 28% of the vote. While this does leave them just in second place, it represents a 4% gain in support since before the Local and European Elections and suggests that the two parties are virtually neck and neck in the minds of the electorate.

Evidence in recent elections would suggest that Fianna Fail tend to do better at the ballot box than polls suggest ...MORE

FAQ's

Logged out of a Survey

Please remember that you can now log back into a survey if you are unable to complete it in one sitting, or if you are logged out due to a technical fault or a server error. We hope this will improve your experience of RedClive. If you are logged out, please wait for at least 15-20 minutes before you attempt to log back in.

Quality Control

We would like to remind you that our reputation as a leading market research company is based on the accuracy and validity of the data we provide to our clients.

To ensure members do not complete surveys hurriedly or provide incorrect information, a series of check questions are included at intervals. These inbuilt quality control questions appear on every survey and are administered to everyone equally. Answers provided by members who failed the Quality Control check are not included in the survey results.

We appreciate that this can be frustrating when a genuine mistake is made, however, we are unable to make exceptions to the mechanisms and allow members to go back and change their answers, so please take extra care to avoid being screened out of surveys.

Reporting issues with surveys

If you encounter an error or a problem when taking part in a survey, such as the screen freezing or otherwise, please forward us the original survey invite, along with a screen shot of the error, where applicable, to info@redclive.ie
